Soquel High shows its artistic side

Kirem Weers, Tiffany McCarroll, Grace Krilanovich and Sara Kishlansky are among the Soquel High artists in the show at Mr. Toots Coffeehouse in Capitola.

Paintings by students at Soquel High School are on display at Mr. Toots Coffeehouse on the Esplanade in Capitola.

The show features work done in Charles Wolters' art classes, but the credit goes to junior Sara Kishlansky, who organized the exhibit, which continues through the end of the month.

"To tell you the truth, I'm not too sure how we got the idea to put on a show," said Kishlansky. "It was just decided."

Kishlansky took control of the show from the very beginning.

"It's a lot of work and for a while I thought I wouldn't be able to pull it off, but as long as I keep reassuring myself that everything will be OK, it will," said Kishlansky, as she looked over her list of artists.

Kishlansky was aided by junior Carina Zercher and a host of student volunteers: Rayna Fletcher, Tiffany McCarroll, Joe Clements, Lauren Eider, Amanda Lefebre and Grace Krilanovich.

"I liked setting up the show because I got to hang out with cool people and drink free coffee," said Zercher.

Wolters thinks many of his students have what it takes to be a successful artist.

"I have faith in my students," he said.

He is especially proud of Kishlansky.

"It's unusual and I can't remember anyone else putting on a whole show like this before," he said.

The painting styles in the exhibit range from senior Jessica Grossman's "Guatemalan Bus" to junior Grace Krilanovich's "Andy Warhol series."

Although their paintings vary, the students share similar attitudes toward art and many of them would like to pursue this interest.

"I want to have a career that has something to do with art," said young artist Tiffany McCarroll, "even though it will be difficult because the art world is getting more and more demanding."

Leslie Paiva is a sophomore journalist student of Carolyn Wade at Soquel High.
